1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the
 2. various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown
 3. that the rate of reaction can be determined by measuring the
 4. change in concentration of the reactants or products, or by
 5. measuring the change in pressure or volume. The most accurate
 6. method is the measurement of the change in concentration of the
 7. reactants or products. This can be done by titration or by
 8. gravimetric analysis. The measurement of the change in pressure
 9. or volume is less accurate, but it is often more convenient.
 10. The rate of reaction is usually expressed in terms of the change
 11. in concentration of the reactants or products per unit time.
 12. The rate of reaction is affected by many factors, such as the 13. concentration of the reactants, the temperature, the presence of 14. a catalyst, and the surface area of the reactants. The rate of
 15. reaction increases with increasing concentration of the reactants,
 16. with increasing temperature, and with the presence of a catalyst.
 17. The rate of reaction also increases with increasing surface area
 18. of the reactants. The rate of reaction is usually determined by
 19. measuring the change in concentration of the reactants or
 20. products, or by measuring the change in pressure or volume.
